"Do this instead." Do WHAT?

I read 872 comments from people over 50 who don't want another job. They loved being told "it's not too late." But comment after comment asked the same thing:

Do this instead??? DO WHAT??? Specifics.

53

The "give them a reason to pay you" part is the piece I'm still trying to figure out.

I recorded something and asked myself... then what??

This guide is my answer. Not a pep talk. The real, simple steps to run a small business on your own, with AI doing the heavy lifting.

You don't need to become a YouTuber. You don't need a big audience. You need one small thing people can buy, and a simple way to share it.

HONESTY NOTE

This is not a get-rich-quick plan, and I won't promise what it will earn. Nobody honestly can. It takes time and real work. What I can promise: by the last page you'll know exactly what to do first.

MEET YOUR GUIDE

Hi, I'm Josée.

I'm 58. I don't code. And today I run my business mostly on my own, with AI doing about 90% of the work.

I tried every "get rich quick" thing and earned nothing. Then I learned real skills and built my own digital products. Later I built an agency that almost broke me.

I rebuilt my business over the past few years, one small step at a time. Three months ago I started using Claude, and it changed everything. Things that took me days now take me hours.

What a one-person AI business really is

It's simpler than it sounds. It's you, plus an AI assistant, plus one small thing people can buy.

No boss. No staff. No office. No boxes in your garage. Your "product" is digital: a short guide, a checklist, a planner, a mini course, a small paid group. You make it once, and people can buy it again and again.

IT IS NOT

- Get-rich-quick
- Dropshipping or a warehouse
- Becoming a famous influencer
- Learning to code
- Quitting your job tomorrow

IT IS

- Small, on purpose
- Built on what you already know
- Run from your kitchen table
- AI does most of the work
- Yours to keep

The one simple test

If it stops paying the moment you stop working, it's not a business. It's a new job with a nicer name.

A lot of "online business" ideas fail this test. You trade your boss for clients, and you're back to trading hours for money.

TYPE	PASSES THE TEST?
Doing work for clients	Not really. When you stop, the money stops. And a client can leave anytime.
Building software or apps	It can, but it's hard, slow and techy to start. Not where I'd begin.
Digital products	Yes. You make it once. People can buy it while you're out living your life.

That's why this guide focuses on digital products. They're the simplest place to start, and they work at any age.

ALREADY KNOW WHAT YOU'D MAKE?

CHAPTER 3

The 4 parts of your business

Every one-person business has the same four parts. Get one of each, keep them simple, and you have a real business.

Just one of each

1. One product

Something small that solves one problem. A 15-page guide. A checklist. A planner. Start with one, not five.

2. One place to sell it

A simple checkout page where people pay and download. You don't need a big website. Many easy tools do this for you.

3. One way to share it

One social platform where your people already are. For most people over 40, that's Facebook. Post helpful things, and mention your product sometimes.

4. One way to stay in touch

An email list. Give away something free in exchange for an email, then stay in touch. Social media can change overnight. Your email list is yours.

THE SECRET

Most people quit because they try to build everything at once. One of each. That's it. You can grow later.

Your AI team

Here's what changed everything for me: AI does the heavy lifting, and I do the part that matters. I call it the 90/10 rule.

AI DOES THE 90%	YOU DO THE 10%
Writes first drafts of your guide	Shares what you know and your stories
Turns one idea into a week of posts	Checks every fact and fixes what isn't you
Reads hundreds of comments and sorts them	Decides what to make
Writes your emails and sales page	Says yes or no, and hits "post"

The brain file: the most important step

Before AI writes anything, it needs to know you. A brain file is a short note about who you are, who you help and how you talk. You save it once (in Claude, inside a "Project"), and everything it writes sounds like you, not a robot.

WITHOUT A BRAIN FILE

Sounds like a robot

WITH A BRAIN FILE

Sounds like you

The exact prompt to make yours is in the "Copy me" chapter.

Pick your first product

Your first product should be small, simple, and about something people already ask you.

Good first products

- A "What I Know" guide: 10 to 20 pages on something you know well
- A checklist or planner: caregiving, travel, budget, garden
- Your old career, simplified: "What I wish I knew in year one"
- A mini workshop: one hour, one problem solved

How to know people want it

1 Listen for repeat questions.

What do friends, family or co-workers always ask you?

2 Read the comments.

Find popular posts about your topic and read what people ask underneath. Their questions are your product ideas.

3 Ask before you build.

Post: "I'm thinking of making a simple guide about _____. Would that help you?" The replies tell you.

Your first 30 days

About 30 minutes a day. One small step at a time. By day 30, you have a real business.

Week 1: Set up your AI team

- Open Claude (free plan to start) on your phone or computer
- Make your brain file (prompt in "Copy me")
- Write down 10 things people ask you about

Week 2: Pick and check your product

- Choose ONE idea from your list
- Read the comments on 3 popular posts about it
- Ask your friends or followers if it would help them

Week 3: Make it with Claude

- Ask Claude for an outline, then draft one section a day
- Add your own stories and fix anything that isn't you
- Turn it into a simple PDF

Week 4: Open your little shop

- Set up one checkout page
- Make one free gift to collect emails
- Share one helpful post a day, and mention your product once a week

THE ONE RULE

Done beats perfect. Give it 90 days before you judge it.

Keep the paycheck. Build on the side.

Please don't quit your job to do this. If you have a job, use it as your safety net while you build.

A one-person business doesn't need 40 hours a week. Start with a few evenings. AI makes those hours count.

A simple 5-hour week

- Monday, 1 hour: plan the week's posts with Claude
- Tuesday to Thursday, 30 min a day: work on your product
- Saturday, 1.5 hours: schedule posts, answer comments
- Sunday, 1 hour: email your list

When your business grows and you know it works, then you decide what's next. On your terms.

You don't need to jump. You need to start walking.

The honest truths

You deserve the truth, not hype.

- 1 It takes time.
Most people quit before month three. That's usually right before it starts working.
- 2 Your first product won't be perfect.
Mine weren't. Make it, share it, then make it better.
- 3 Nobody can promise you income.
If someone does, walk away. Online scams love people who are starting over.
- 4 You don't have to show your face.
Many one-person businesses are faceless. Photos, words and helpful posts work too.
- 5 AI can be wrong.
You're the boss. Check the facts, especially anything about health, money or the law.
- 6 Your age is an advantage.
Your experience, your patience, your stories: that's exactly what people want to learn from.

The prompts I use

Copy these into Claude, fill in the brackets, and go. I don't mind. That's why I share them.

1. MAKE MY BRAIN FILE

Interview me so you can write my "brain file": a short note about who I am, who I help, what I know, and how I talk. Ask me 8 simple questions, one at a time. Then write the brain file in plain words, under 300 words, so I can save it and use it every time.

2. FIND MY FIRST PRODUCT

Using my brain file, give me 10 small digital product ideas based on what I know. For each: who it helps, what problem it solves, and whether a beginner could make it in 2 weeks. No hype, no income promises. Then tell me the ONE you'd start with and why.

3. OUTLINE MY GUIDE

Write a simple outline for a 15-page guide called [title] for [who it helps]. Plain words, short chapters, a checklist at the end. Then help me write it one section at a time, in my voice.

4. A WEEK OF POSTS

Using my brain file, write 7 short, helpful Facebook posts about [my topic]. Each one starts with a real worry my people have, then gives one small tip. Mention my guide in only one of them.
